

Port Broughton South Australia - April 13th until April 17th 2006.

The Port Broughton Caravan Park is 170kms North of Adelaide on the Eastern side of Spencer Gulf in South Australia.

Thurs 13th April 2006 : I had finished work at 6.00am and after a few hours sleep, all of the final packing had been done by the time Sally had arrived home from her work at around 2.00pm allowing us to be on the road soon after 2.10pm. It was surprising how the traffic had now built up on the road heading out of Adelaide. Bruce and Maree had arrived at Port Broughton earlier in the day and Sue and Malcolm were roughly an hour ahead of us. Once we had left the Adelaide to Port Augusta road, the traffic wasn't any concern to us unlike we knew it would be on the return trip home. It was 4.00pm when we arrived at Port Broughton and booked into the Caravan Park. The Parked looked to be in the best condition that we had seen for some years now.

Fri 14th April until Sunday 16th April 2006: As most of our Easter trips to Port Broughton are, our days consisted of talking, relaxing and walking along the beach. It is normally a location that allows all of our friends from the country to visit and say hello, let alone the family members that normally join the group making for large numbers at times. The photos below are of the sites that we had booked for the Easter period. Unfortunately, our sites are about the only ones which are not fully grassed, but with the new managers at the Park hopefully that will change.

It was a good opportunity for Malcolm and I to compare some of our home brew beers. The photo to the left is a German Bavarian Lager and the photo to the right is the Bavarian Lager along side of a Draught.

The local Bakery calls on the Caravan Park each morning to sell freshly baked goods.

The weather was a real mixed bag over the Easter period ranging from cold wind, to sunshine and finally rain on the Monday. It was on the Sunday that we took the opportunity to walk out on the jetty and to return along the beach back to the Caravan Park taking some photos as we walked.

Mon 17th April 2006: All good weekends must come to an end as all except Bruce and Maree were heading home soon after lunch. Well that was our intension until the rain set in late morning so we all completed our packing up and headed for home. We would have normally returned home through Bute and Kulpara, but instead decided to travel via Bute and Snowtown to avoid the Easter traffic jam between Kulpara and Port Wakfield. With rain all the way home, we arrived safe and sound at 1.30pm.

Next trip will be in a few days time to Renmark for our annual Anzac weekend away on the Murray.
